

The S.Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) and the CSIS Freeman Chair in China Studies invite you to a major policy forum:

Emerging Nontraditional Security Challenges in Asia

Tuesday, March 6, 2007

9:00 a.m. to 4:00 pm

CENTER FOR STRATEGIC AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES
1800 K STREET, NW
B1 LEVEL CONFERENCE CENTER

At this conference, senior U.S. and Asia experts will offer constructive analysis, insights, and critiques on the emerging security debate in Asia. The conference will focus especially how governments in the region can best respond to such transnational problems as terrorism, piracy, migration pressures, and the spread of disease. We will address the following questions: Can “traditional” alliance relationships be fully responsive to transnational challenges? Are other, multilateral approaches best suited? What are the prospects going forward for governments to effectively cooperate in meeting these emergent challenges? What will be the likely U.S. approach to these questions?
